

ESPAÑA 2019/20

PRESS RELEASE

Spanish companies have increased their PR budgets by 22% since 2013

- Luisa Alli Turillas (IKEA), María Luisa Melo (Huawei) and María Luisa Martínez (Caixabank) highlighted as the most admired sector professionals by companies and industry professionals. Campofrío is again one of the most highlighted for its communication, followed by Bankia.
- Communications consultancies contribute on average 16% to their clients' business growth.
- Communications consultancies' most valued aspects are knowledge of the market, brand and client, proactiveness, taking the initiative, creativity and proposal of innovative ideas.

Madrid, 8th October 2019.- Increasingly more companies are aware of the need to have a professional team, such as communications consultancies or PR agencies. This is to be able to help manage their image and reputation. In fact, in the last 6 years companies' PR Budgets have increased by 22%, earning €272.000 on average. Investment in offline outlets (59%) continues to outperform the destined target for online outlets (41%), as indicated in the latest edition of the PR SCOPE 2019/20, conducted by the marketing and advertising consultancy SCOPEN.

The upwards trend of online communication investments is in contrast with the decrease in offline communication investment. Whilst investment in online communication was barely 15% in 2011 (which has since seen an increase of 173%), offline was at 85.2% 8 years ago (it has reduced by 30%).

How companies define the ideal communications consultancy

Conversely, when it comes to defining the “ideal” consultancy, companies’ communication teams highlight the most important qualities as: knowledge of market, client and brand (37%), proactiveness and taking the initiative (37%) and creativity and proposal of innovative ideas on the consultancies part (31%).

“In fact, if we compare with the results from the previous edition, the growth in importance of customer service-related aspects stand out, as well as strategic planning and research capabilities”, stated Héctor Abanades, Research Manager at SCOPEN.

Consultancies contribute 16% to the growth of their clients’ businesses.

Communications consultancies contribute, on average, 16% to the growth of their client’s businesses. Strengthening research and data capabilities to continue demonstrating effectiveness in their work, will increase this contribution in future. “If we bear in mind the size of the budget for communication and that of marketing and media, in comparison, communications consultancies’ input is much greater”, explains César Vacchiano, President & CEO of SCOPEN.

75% of businesses would work with communications consultancies again.

In 2019, 57% of companies declared that they’d worked with communications consultancies in the past (although they’ve currently adopted in-house solutions). From those, 75% confessed that they would work with a communications consultancy again, compared to 25% that wouldn’t. Óscar López, Studies & Research Director of SCOPEN declares that “external contribution, demonstrating vision and experience, is key to adding value to internal departments”.

Having an adequate internal structure to lead the communication plan, knowing the sector better and budget reasons, are the reasons why businesses choose to handle the business plan internally. Conversely, companies hire communications consultancies because they have communications professionals, they know the sector well, and offer solutions as well as having good relations with the media.

Luisa Alli Turillas, Director of Communication of IKEA, is the most admired professional in the sector

Amongst the communications professionals from the most admired companies by sector professionals are Luisa Alli Turillas (IKEA), María Luisa Melo (Huawei) and María Luisa Martínez (CaixaBank), as indicated in the SCOPEN PR SCOPE 2019/20.

ESPAÑA 2019/20

Finally, it must be noted that LLYC is first in market perception, Hotwire in client valuation and Apple Tree Communications in consultancy professionals.

Almudena Alonso, ADECEC president (Asociación de Empresas Consultoras en Relaciones Públicas y Comunicación), states that "the results show that we are contributing more and more to business success from efficient management of intangible assets, combining both the short and long term. In the future, the use of data analytics will be key to define effective strategies which accompany the consumer on their journey and allow us to personalise more, in addition to the boom in our roll in the employer marketing atmosphere".

*Sample: carried out among 287 professionals who work in 274 different companies (372 client-consultant relations), 40 professionals from companies who don't work with consultancies, 20 from buying teams, 192 professionals working in consultancies and 30 journalists. The professional interviewed at each client company should be involved in the decision-making process in communications consultancies selection. They should also interact with them on a day-to-day basis at work.
